PATRIOTISM AND MONEY.

Correspondent Points Out Position of the Government.

Editor of The Times: The impression which may be made by some, allusion to the bounties paid to secure enlistments in the war of the Rebellion which was communicated in a recent issue of your paper are so misleading that I deem it an injustice to let them pass uncorrected and beg to call your reader's attention more particularly to the facts of the history of those matters.

In 1861, by the scheming of those who proposed to destroy the union the national credit was ruined, private enterprise and industry was paralyzed; there was nothing but uncertainty and apprehension as to the future. But the firing upon Fort Sumter changed it all as by an electric shock. The spirit of the North, which had cowered and waited, was aroused to an assertion of itself. The call for 75,000 men for the army was a signal for the hosts of the unemployed to reopen the closed work shops and factories and to create such new industries as the maintenance of an army and the prosecution of a war required. The band of iron rails with which had been planned to span the continent must be laid at once, that the people of the Atlantic and Pacific coasts might be united in defending the union. So while the first call for troops was met and the next for 300,000 men for three years' service promptly responded to with volunteers, on demand and supply was in the law of demand and supply was in operation; wages went up—a man was worth two and three dollars a day on the farm during haying and harvesting. Good men could contract for three or six months as farm laborers for $50 per month. There were no restrictions on hiring or working at a trade, and any man who could buy the tools might be at once a mechanic with liberty to charge his own price for labor. Men were scarce in every field of industry. Congress, to secure men for the army, did what business men were doing—offered wages which they hoped would secure the men. Patriotic citizens in the various communities of the country met and discussed the matters and decided that as they could not go to the war they would make it an object for others to respond to the call for troops who could. Many business men, some in response to a draft and others voluntarily, hired substitutes to represent them in the service and fathers sent other men to the front in place of their sons.

It happened at the close of the war that there was a large number of troops who had received heavy bounties who, while they had enlisted for a period of three years, had served only a few months, but this was only one of the accidents of war and could not have been anticipated by anyone.

Another fact to be considered in relation to the question of bounties is this, that Lincoln was elected president by a minority party—he had received more than 1,000,000 less votes than were cast for the candidates opposed to him. His administration was always subject to the severest criticisms and the attempt to raise troops by conscription and draft was met in various places by open resistance and rioting—which in New York had resulted in the destruction of the vast amount of property, but when bounties were voted the recruits were found and the quota filled. The success of the plan was complete and we did not then hear it criticized nor have we since except by those who desired the defeat of Mr. Lincoln's administration.

Those communities in which the draft was resisted were those in which the foreign element largely predominated. I do not know that their course was altogether surprising, and it certainly was better to persuade than to compel them to a defense of their new liberties, else they might have received the recruits from a land of liberty. The paying of bounties was proposed and carried out by our most patriotic citizens. It seemed to help distribute the burdens of the war enabling those who could not serve at the front to contribute something to the encouragement and support of those who did, and to have paid it or to have received it under the circumstances cannot be urged against the patriotism of either party. But the adoption of this method of recruiting the armies is another evidence of the inspiration of good sense and sound judgment given to the patriots of the land at a crisis in its history.

Respectfully,
Chas. A. Smith.

FEET AND HANDS CRIPPLED

With Rheumatism, I Could not Walk for Six Months, and Went to Hospital after Hospital, but Could Get No Relief until

CURED BY

Four years ago I was taken with rheumatism, and for three years I could not do any work at all. But for the last year, since using Minard's Liniment, I am able to do all my household work. I think that I know the worth of Minard's Liniment better than any person who has ever suffered with rheumatism. Hundreds of people who know of my suffering give Minard's Liniment the praise. I wish that every one knew the worth of this Liniment as I do. Yours truly, Mrs. Emma B. Williams, 62 Sawyer St., Boston.

A Canadian's Opinion of Poultry Foods

Experience is the best teacher every time. It is fortunate that all do not have to go through the same experience. Some can have the benefit of that which others have gone through. What W. J. McClary of Frost Village, Que., says about the use of Poultry Foods will be of especial value to those who keep poultry. Here is his letter: "I have been using 'Page's Perfected Poultry Food' for some time past with excellent results. I would say that in feeding I get better results than with any other food on the market and at a smaller cost."

Any one sending his address on a postal card to C. S. Page, Hyde Park, Vt., and mentioning this paper, will receive by mail, free, postpaid, a sample package of "Page's Perfected Poultry Food."

FIGHT WITH A SHARK

Fisherman Kills a 600-Pound Monster

Portland, Me., Jan. 13.—E. H. Miller, one of the crew of the fishing schooner Moses B. Lincoln, had a hard fight off this coast Thursday with a man-eating shark.

He caught the shark and pulled it to the surface, where it showed fight. It made repeated attempts to get at Miller, and several times the shark nearly took his life.

Miller fought the shark with an axe, and finally gave it a stunning blow. His brother, William S. Miller, went to his assistance and the shark was killed. It is estimated to weigh 600 pounds.

SEVEN DEATHS IN ALL

Spotted Fever Among Apprentices at Newport, R. I.

Newport, R.
